A man was killed when a stack parking column collapsed on him in Chembur on Monday afternoon.

The incident occurred around 4:30 p.m. at Swastik Flair building, D.K. Sandu Marg, Chembur (East). Prakash Sundaram, who lives in an adjacent bungalow, said he was resting when he heard a loud sound.

Police are trying to identify the man.

Inspector Sunil Jadhav of Chembur police confirmed the death of one person, whose identity was not known immediately.

An eyewitness, who declined to be named, said the man, who was doing housekeeping work for the building, was below the cars which were stacked one above another on the stack parking, when the structure collapsed all of a sudden.

Local residents and the Fire Brigade had a tough time extricating the mangled body of the housekeeper. They used crowbars and other tools to lift the metal structure which had fallen on the man, but in vain. It was only after someone pressed a button did the lift move up a little making it possible to remove the body. A doctor residing in the building certified the man dead," said K. Atka, a neighbour.

The residents of a society in Jogeshwari West took to Twitter and other social media platforms and vented their fear and frustration when a lift collapsed in their building for the second time - this time an automated car parking lift, however, there have been no injuries so far. According to the residents, the car was with a NG cylinder which could've blasted, also last month a similar incident occurred when a lift of the same building came down. The residents have demanded that the whole building should be analyzed by the BMC and an FIR should be filed against the builders, as the families are now living in fear.

According to a social activist in the area, Mohsin Shaikh, the residents of the Universal Cubical complex, Jogeshwari West, contacted him twice regarding the lift issue. "First the lift defaulted on February 21 and fell right from the 21st floor to the ground floor and crashed, fortunately, there was no one in the lift at the time. During the second incident, the car parking lift malfunctioned and came down with a CNG car parked on it on Wednesday."

Shaikh tweeted about both incidents which made the pictures and videos of the incident go viral. "I request the BMC and the fire brigade department to analyze the whole building construction and the lifts in the building so that in future there would not be any loss to human life as the residents of the building are living in fear," he said.

A resident of the building who did not wish to be named said that the lift keeps malfunctioning on a regular basis and last month his friend's mother was stuck in one of the lifts for more than 20 mins after which she passed out and had to be rescued. "We fear to send our children alone in the lift, we have caught our children the buttons on the lift which need to be pressed during an emergency very crucial for their lives," said the resident.

When contacted the lift company, they said that they have been proactively

Multi-level parking fails: Upper deck falls on a Kia Seltos
28th July 2022, 11:26 AM IST

View Forum Discussion

Luckily there was no car on the upper deck; hence the damages were minimal. Only scratches on the roof rails.

BHPian Tejas Ingle recently shared this with other enthusiasts.

This mishap took place last week in a corporate office parking in Pune. The upper deck of a mechanical parking lowered itself without any human intervention and rested onto the roof of a Seltos parked on the lower deck. Then it stopped working completely. The deck was heavy enough to compress the suspension of the car almost completely.

Luckily there was no car on the upper deck; hence the damages were minimal. Only scratches on the roof rails. The deck was lifted by several people and the car was driven out.

Usually there are sensors and systems in these parkings to prevent these type of incidents. This one seems to be a combination of multiple system failures:
